SERPENTS' VENOM - What a wonderful thing emarks an English writer, the venom of a serpent is! Chemical analysis fails to detect anything in it which might account for its as ion. Water, a little altumen, some mineral salts, and traces of mucus, epithelial cells, etc., lumped together as "extractive." Nothing morenothing specific about it, at all. l'asteless, colorless and inodurous, it may be subbed on the sound skin, or applied to the eye, or taken into the mouth without any result whatever.

The bites of different kinds of snakus produce different effecte; some act as a depressant to the vesiciar system, some as a powerful parcotic, some cause inflamation of the spine, while others seem to give rise to disorganization of the structural constituents of the blood. All are attended more or less with rigors, delitium, syccope, convulsions, paraly is and coms. Whether the poisons of any two or more species are indentical I do not know-it seems probable; but in the five species with which I have experimented on myself, so far I have found five distinct and separate venoms. I imagine, for instance, that the rattlesnake and copporhead will prove to possess the same, and perhaps several of the viperine snakes. I hope so Some of these finds are unstable, and decompess if kept only a short time or if their specific gravity is disturbed, while others retain their deadly properties even when dried. That of the common Franch viper ("Vipera aspis") may be diluted down till it

No true autidote has ever been discovered for the bite of any snake, and the search for some-thing which shall be an antidute against the bite of them all seems to be irrational in the extreme, seeing that there are so many different poisons producing in many cases opposite effects. One might as well expect to find a general antidote for opium, belladonna, strychnice, arsenic and mercury poisoning.

The action of ammonis, upon which so much stress has been laid, is probably nothing more than that of a strong suc ulant; certainly its ac-tion in maintaining the fluidity of the blood is quite hypothetical, seeing that prema une coagusation of the fibrine has never been actually de-monstrated, Indeed, it is said that at the autopay of the keeper Girling, bitten many years ago by a cobra di capello at the Gardens, the blood formed no clot at all, but was found permanently fluid in all the great vessels.

A BACKWOODS HEROINE -In the midst of a large forest, five or six miles back of Damascus, Wayne county, lives Heary Merril, a well kcows hunter and trapper. He has but one companion in his solitary abode-a daughter aged about eighteen years. Little Merrill can row a boat, shoot a gun or trap a bear as well and skillfully as any man in the county of Wayne. A day or two ago she started to cross a large inland lake, on the borders of which her beme is located, in a light skiff. She carried, as was her custom, a small rifl slang scross her shoulder by a leather strap. She was paddling along leisurely, and, when nearly half way scross the pond, discovered an object moving in the water, and, upon approaching closer, found that it was an immense five pronged buck, which had been driven into the water by dogs. She immediately drew ber r fl and, after taking careful aim, fired. As she pulled the trigger the buck made a sudden movement, and the ball, instead of reaching is mark, entered the acimal's neck. miking an ugly and painful wound. The buck coraged by the pain, struck at the boat with one of its forelege, shattering the frail back in pieces. The boat sank at occo leaving Miss Merrill in the water with the struggling and infuriated animal. But she was plucky and could swim. She grasped the back by the horns, and, de-liberately drawing her hunting kuife, which wes sharp as a rezer, from her belt, she plung ed it into the deer's n ck, kiling him almost iestantly. She then swam to the shore, about an eighth of a mile, and hurried home, where she put on dry clothing, and, after procuring another boat, rowed out to where the dead buck we floating and towed the animal to shore. When dressed the buck weighed over (we had dred and seventy five pounds, and was the fig est one killed in this section f r years. This is the eighteenth deer Miss Merrill has killed, and she is proud of her adventure, which is the most thrilling one she has ever had. She iqtends having the buck's head stuffed, as a memen'o of her terrible struggle for life. - Ihiladelphia Press.
